Swiss Art Awards 2021

The Swiss Art Awards 2021 will be given in Basel on 20 September 2021 in the presence of Yves Fischer, Deputy Director of the Federal Office of Culture. For this year's edition of the awards (launched in 1899), the Federal Office of Culture will honour eight artists, a duo of architects and two positions from the field of Critique, publishing, exhibition on the basis of recommendations by the Federal Art Commission and invited experts.

The three laureates of the Swiss Grand Prix for Art/Prix Meret Oppenheim 2021 will also be honoured. This year's winners are architect and landscape architect Georges Descombes, curator Esther Eppstein and artist Vivian Suter. The speeches honouring the laureates will be given by Sissi Zöbeli (co-founder of the Zurich-based brand Thema Selektion) for Vivian Suter; the Swiss artist Noah Merzbacher for Esther Eppstein; and Elissa Rosenberg (landscape architect and professor at the Bezalel Academy of Arts and Design in Jerusalem) for Georges Descombes. The award ceremony is on invitation only.

Exhibition

Works by the winners, as well as participants selected for the second round of the Swiss Art Competition, will be presented at the Swiss Art Awards 2021 exhibition, taking place parallel to Art Basel. For the twenty fifth year, the Swiss Art Awards exhibition has been a key part of Basel's cultural programme together with the art fairs in June (this year in September due to the Covid pandemic). Presented by the Swiss Federal Office of Culture, the exhibition not only enables a broad public to see contemporary Swiss art, architecture and critic, publishing, exhibition projects in a single location, but also gives local cultural creators the chance to encounter an international audience of specialists.

Competition

The Swiss Art Competition is open to artists, architects, curators, and critics who are who are Swiss citizens or who live in Switzerland. The jury is formed by the Federal Art Commission with the support of five experts. The competition has two rounds. In the first round, applicants submit a portfolio to the jury. Selected applicants are invited to a second round where they display their work as part of the public Swiss Art Awards exhibition. In the art category, the selected applicants are awarded a grant of 5,000 Swiss francs by the Federal Office of Culture. In the categories architecture and critique, publishing, exhibition, the Federal

Office of Culture grants 1,500 Swiss francs to the selected applicants. This year, 55 participants were selected from a total of 320 submissions. The jury named 8 winners, each of whom receives a prize of 25,000 Swiss francs. In the category critique, publishing, exhibition, the winning projects are awarded each with a prize of 25,000 Swiss francs and an additional budget of 5,000 Swiss francs for the realization of their project for the following year. In the category architecture, the authors of the winning project are awarded with a prize of 25,000 Swiss francs and an additional budget of 25,000 Swiss francs for the realization of the architectural project for the following year.

Federal Art Commission and experts

The members of the Federal Art Commission, chaired by Raffael Dörig, are Laura Arici, Victoria Easton, Julie Enckell Julliard and Anne-Julie Raccoursier. The invited experts are Luca Frei (since 2021), Lucie Kolb (since 2020), Uriel Orlow (since 2019) and Una Szeemann (since 2020), and for the field of architecture: Jeannette Kuo (since 2020) and Tanya Zein (since 2019).

Exhibition architecture

For the exhibition architecture of the Swiss Art Awards, the Federal Office of Culture has once again collaborated with Zurich-based architecture office Conen Sigl Architekten. The presentation, developed specifically for the site, responds to the needs of the exhibits, installations and performances during the weeklong exhibition. Creating specific atmospheres for spaces through precise interventions at all scales, the office is also responsible for the new entrance of the Swiss Art Awards; a large billboard next to the entrance to Hall 3, the "Supersign", guides the visitors.

Graphic Design Concept

Atlas Studio is responsible for the graphic design of the Swiss Art Awards from 2018 to 2021. The studio was founded in 2011 by Martin Anderegg, Claudio Gasser and Jonas Wandeler. In addition to their studio work, its members teach at the art academies in Zurich (ZHdK), Lucerne (HSLU) and Lausanne (ECAL). Atlas Studio's work was awarded the Swiss Design Prize in 2014. In 2017, it was awarded the prize The Most Beautiful Swiss Books and the Bronze Medal in the competition The Most Beautiful Books in the World with the book "Autonomy on A4"

Marie Bette

*1988 in Paris (FR), works in Geneva and Paris (FR)

“Marie invites us to venture inside her installation. The sculptures thus form a kind of inward-facing circle, putting us simultaneously in the position of observers and observed, absorbing us in an interplay of ambivalence. The shapes are made up of precisely chosen materials and tones, from pistachio-coloured, ruffled velvet, cold metal and white silk to the knotted baculum of a bull calf. These endow the objects with a force that wavers between seduction and repulsion, between the body and its absence, and invite viewers to follow the narrative of a rite whose rules are unknown, positioning them at the centre of a magnetic interaction of the mysterious.

Marie Bette’s sculptures cause something in and around them to resonate, highlighting the complex relationship between form and imagination.”

Maëlle Gross

*1988 in Eden-Roch, works in Geneva and Lausanne

“Maëlle Gross’s video work is a feminist speculation based on an associative concatenation of quotations. An erudite narrator guides us from the topic of the mother to the mushroom at the end of the world, and to a fluid goddess Diana whose voguing can be read as a combat manoeuvre, with fingernails as weapons and looks that can kill. Like science fiction, dreaming is a tactic used here to make narratives modellable, in the sense of both nocturnal dreaming as poetic engine, and dreaming of another world. The jury were impressed by Maëlle Gross’s meticulous, original staging, her concern with topical issues, and the way in which the text fragments productively contaminate each other.”

Pauline Julier

in Geneva, works
in Geneva

“The video work Cercate Ortensia is an oration on disappearance, loss and disaster, but also an ode to resistance and freedom. In a powerfully evocative montage, Pauline Julier uses material from archives both personal and borrowed to construct a layered, critical reflection on our fields of perception and relationship with the environment.

Cercate Ortensia is shot through with the precariousness and disruption brought about by the pandemic situation. In this tale, spatial and temporal disorientation, breath, air, fire and embers become philosophical tools for multiplying perspectives. Pauline Julier envelops us in a narrative whose lyricism and tone shift as they come into contact with the elements surrounding them, like the hydrangeas.”

L'Acte pur
Andreas Hochuli,
Tristan Lavoyer

*1982, *1986, work in Geneva and Lausanne

“Serving as a base for the artists who will stage their concerts outside the confines of the Swiss Art Awards site, L'Acte pur's space is both installation and promotional venue, part camp site and part sales stand for a local product at a regional fair. That hybrid character resonates in L'Acte pur, a music duo who use basic equipment for their performances: two microphones, two speakers and a mixer as well as two televisions playing a karaoke show, with the various song lyrics displayed on kitsch backgrounds in a range of cheesy fonts. The flawed aesthetic matches the way the songs are performed, with a mixture of skill and incompetence: the kind of “de-skilling” that is typical of karaoke. The outdated styles underscore the move into a new world where word processing is no longer the sole preserve of IT programs but is subject to various readings and rewritings by artificial intelligence. That destabilisation of textual integrity reflects shared fears of a loss of identity in a contemporary context where the concept of masculinity is being renegotiated.”

Hunter Longe

*1985 in Oakland (US),
works in Geneva

“Belemnite fossils, magnetite sand, selenite, gypsum cement, sandstone, Libyan desert glass, pigments, graphite, solar cells, LEDs and squid ink are just some of the materials Hunter Longe brings together in his exquisitely crafted wall objects. Mounted on two facing rows of what appears to be a dingy corridor, the installation hauntingly evokes the figure of the 19th-century amateur fossil collector, palaeontologist and artist Elizabeth Philpot, who discovered that belemnite fossils still contained ink sacs, and that the fossilised ink could be revived with water. Make no mistake: the work is no nostalgia trip to the past, but rather a paean to geological time and space whose subtle messages of death and survival have become all the more urgent in our present era of the Anthropocene.”

Marie Matusz

in Toulouse (FR),
works in Basel

“The installation Singular service has a captivating elegance, formal clarity and pictorial presence: this is image in the sense of idea and real pictoriality. Is this service singular because it is the only one or because it is a one-off? A sophisticated mirroring of the individual elements opens up new avenues of thought. The gleaming steel of the autopsy tables meets the opaque glass of the rectangular cuboid reminiscent of a sarcophagus, in which we can make out a face with three eyes, two noses and one mouth. The surface of one table reflects the underside of the other. A black plastic chair offers a mise en abyme response to the table construction. The abandoned ping-pong bats point us towards the chair and thus the absence of human beings. And yet a human being is present,

Singular service, 2021

as the observer’s reflection in the gleaming surfaces. Et in Arcadia ego: even in Arcadia I am here; or death is in Arcadia too.”

Maria Pomiansky

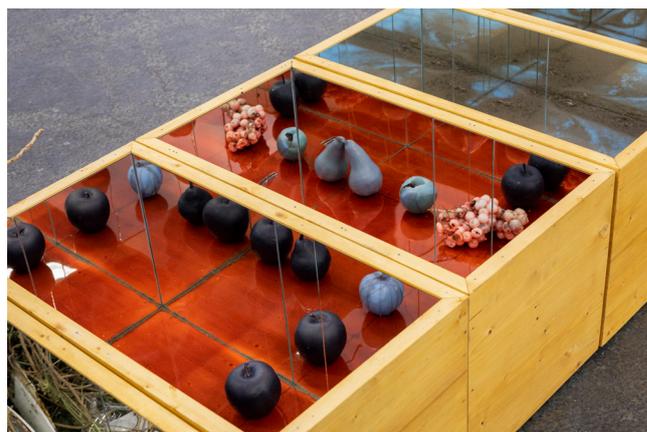

*1971 in Moscow (RU),
works in Zurich

"Observing and capturing, looking and drawing: Maria Pomiansky observes the everyday life around her with astonished curiosity and captures small moments in drawings. She is interested in people and recounts their activities, maintaining the same distance or proximity to her motif at all times. In anthropology, this is known as participant observation: the idea is to avoid intervening in the goings-on whenever possible, but instead to record them and collect artefacts. She committed her artist colleagues to paper while the Swiss Art Awards exhibition was being installed, and will continue observing and capturing while it is on. The process is threefold: assimilation of the world, storytelling through chronological recording and, above all, thinking in pictures. Thus we, as observers, view the art world through her eyes."

Paulo Wirz

*1990 in Pindamonhangaba
(BR), works in Zurich
and Geneva

"In his sculptural work, Paulo Wirz creates "alternative spaces" whose evocative power derives from the use of symbolic materials or objects. The twelve wooden modules placed on the ground operate as elements of a story within a story, in which allusions to death are blended with allusions to the countryside or to ritual. We are therefore invited to gaze into the deep blue of what might be an empty swimming pool before moving on to the décor of a Jesuit church or poking our noses into the dust. In what looks like a collection of miniature reliquaries, fruits, wax, mirrors, branches and ashes appear as symbols of vanitas, expressed by the artist in minimal forms. Combining the vocabulary of Donald Judd with that of Spanish Baroque, Paulo Wirz offers us a profound reflection on the passage of time. He creates a composition that is at once open, poetic and precise: the ideal form for a project he has been working on for some years."

Architecture

Maclver-Ek Chevroulet founded in 2019,
in Neuchâtel

maciverekchevroulet.ch

“Maclver-Ek Chevroulet’s conceptual strategy is about more than just intervention in the built environment: it reads the hall as an integral part of the city and of a constantly changing neighbourhood within an institution that is questioning itself. The outcome is an opportunity to redefine access to the hall: the project creates a second entrance on the street behind, at the periphery of the trade fair site while at the heart of the district. Taking advantage of an existing doorway, a new porch plays with conventions and creates unexpected situations. The minimal intervention opens up new possibilities while exploiting the raw material of architecture: human beings and their movements within the public space.”

Rosa Brux

in Geneva

rosabrux.org

“With Ordinary Echoes, Rosa Brux creates a space in which artists can tell of everyday work and copyright problems and, in so doing, focus attention on working conditions in the art world. The project follows on from legal advice sessions conducted in 2018 in the Forde exhibition space in collaboration with Lab-of-Arts that have subsequently been continued in the Bureau des Compagnies. Based on interviews, correspondence and lawyers’ notes, reports are compiled that are re-played at audio stations. The stories aim to encourage artists to share their own experiences and pursue their institutional critique at other venues. The jury was impressed by Rosa Brux’s practice of cultural policy activism that successfully conveys the social struggles of artists within the exhibition context.”

Sonnenstube

in Lugano

diesonnenstube.ch

“The principle of hospitality is at the heart of the residency project presented by the itinerant collective Sonnenstube. Issuing an invitation to all the participants in the Swiss Art Awards 2022, Souvenir Souvenir is a chance to spend a short time in Italian-speaking Switzerland, in close contact with the local cultural scene and the region: an opportunity to discover new, transdisciplinary, intergenerational and multilingual ways of living together and try out new forms of dialogue and exchange for the future. The experiences that emerge from this intense, extended and unpredictable series of residencies will be gathered together and shared, either physically or virtually, during the Swiss Art Awards 2022, via NADA, the caravan that serves as a mobile base for Sonnenstube.”

Edelaar Mosayebi Inderbitzin Architekten: Anthropomorphe Form

The installation Anthropomorphe Form at the Swiss Art Awards 2021 exhibition fills the entire exhibition hall with its fabric canopy: it is a room-sized work that transforms the hall into a new architectural space reminiscent of the temporary structures of marquees. That impression is instantly confounded, however, by the fabric's continually changing form.

The translucent fabric is suspended in five axes on thin ropes, each of which is moved by one of 42 motors. The motors are controlled by an algorithm that processes various parameters of human and atmospheric activity: the noise level, the number and distribution of the visitors, the speed of their movements, and so on.

The fabric canopy thus becomes an actual organ of the visitors present, almost imperceptibly creating constantly changing spaces as a backdrop for the exhibition: sometimes monumental, sometimes intimate; sometimes architectural, then organic once again. The fabric forms an archaic tented roof or shrouds those present in a mimetic cloud.

The work thus tackles the influence of human beings on the environment within which we move and the traditionally permanent form of architecture, in a subtle commentary on the Anthropocene epoch.

Edelaar Mosayebi Inderbitzin Architekten realised the project in collaboration with Fabian Bircher. The project manager was Lukas Burkhart.
