Swiss Art Awards 2017

The Swiss Art Awards 2017 will be presented on 12 June in Basel in the presence of the Director of the Federal Office of Culture, Isabelle Chassot. For this year's edition of the awards (initiated in 1899), the Federal Office of Culture will honour 9 artists, 1 architectural office, and 1 curator on the basis of recommendations by the Federal Art Commission and specially invited experts. Simultaneously, the event will honour the winners of the Swiss Grand Award for Art/Prix Meret Oppenheim 2017. This year, the winners of the renowned prize are artist Daniela Keiser, architect Peter Märkli and art and architecture historian Philip Ursprung.

Exhibition

Works by the winners, as well as participants selected for the second round of the Swiss Art Competition, will be presented at the Swiss Art Awards 2017 exhibition, taking place parallel to Art Basel. For two decades, the Swiss Art Awards exhibition has been an inseparable component of the cultural program in Basel during the art fairs in June. Presented by the Swiss Federal Office of Culture, the exhibition not only enables a broad public to see contemporary Swiss art and architecture projects gathered together in a single location, but also serves as an opportunity for local cultural creators to present themselves to an international audience of specialists.

Competition

Participation in the Swiss Art Competition is open to artists, architects, and curators/critics who are Swiss citizens or reside in Switzerland. The jury is formed by the Federal Art Commission, with the support of five experts. The competition takes place in two rounds. In the first round, applicants submit a portfolio to the jury. Selected applicants are invited to a second round, where they display their work as part of the public Swiss Art Awards exhibition. Those invited to the exhibition are awarded a grant of 5,000 Swiss francs by the Federal Office of Culture. This year, participants were selected out of a total of 340 submissions. The jury names 11 winners, each of whom receive a prize of 25,000 Swiss francs.

Focus on the category architecture

Is architecture a form of art? This century-old debate is still relevant today. Ideally art and architecture mutually inspire and motivate each other. However, the legitimacy of architecture as a part of the Swiss Art Awards has often been questioned, be it merely in terms of the exhibition format, that architecture can be exhibited just as well as art. But it's simply the case that architecture is difficult to display – people live in it, you can walk around inside it. Architecture has nevertheless been an integral part of the competition ever since its establishment. This can be traced back to the initiative of the architect Hans W. Auer (1847-1906), a member and later chairman of the Federal Art Commission. Thanks to its holistic vision, the Swiss Art Awards allows creators of art and architecture to develop an aspect of their work. This means that they can deepen a general interest or experiment with things that they have come across in other projects. The Swiss Art Awards promote initiatives. In the case of architecture, they are naturally closely linked to buildings and are judged independently of whether the project will be realized or just conceptualized. The prize honours a genuine interest in architecture as an independent discipline separate from art itself. This view is also reflected spatially in this year's exhibition with architectonic interventions presented at the centre of the hall.

Jury / Federal Art Commission

The members of the Federal Art Commission, chaired by Giovannie Carmine, are Laura Arici, Valentin Carron, Victoria Easton, Julie Enckell Julliard, Anne-Julie Raccoursier and Anselm Stalder. The advisory experts this year are Francis Baudevin, Alexandra Blättler and Edit Oderbolz (visual art), as well as Aldo Noll and Anne Marie Wagner (architecture).

Exhibition Architecture

For the exhibition architecture of the Swiss Art Awards, the Federal Office of Culture has collaborated with Zurich-based architecture office Conen Sigl Architekten. The presentation, developed specifically for the site, responds to the needs of the exhibits, installations, and performances during the week-long exhibition. The office, which creates specific atmospheres for a place or room through precise interventions on all scale levels, is also responsible for the new entrance situation of the Swiss Art Awards. Next to the entrance to Hall 3, the visitor is guided by a large billboard.

Graphic Design Concept

Zurich-based graphic designers Gregor Huber and Ivan Sterzinger are responsible for the art direction of the Swiss Art Awards over a three-year period which began in 2015. Their concept follows a three-stage approach: Marketing (2015), Migration (2016), and Promotion (2017).

This year, the Swiss Art Awards will examine the working conditions of artistic production: how do participating artists finance their work, what is the relationship between the work they do to earn money and their income from selling pieces and what role does direct and indirect funding from cultural institutions and artists' own families play. Contrary to the popular belief that art funding forms a substantial part of an artist's income, institutional funding only accounts for about 20% of their livelihood. In contrast, an average of 45% of their income comes from paid work and 30% from sales. The percentage of cultural funding is only higher if indirect funding of the artist through the support of museums, art institutions (Kunsthallen) and exhibition spaces is included. The Swiss Art Awards 2017 will communicate these statistics' relationship to the support claims generally used for backers as well as in the listings of the paid work artists engage in outside of art.

The publication Swiss Art Awards 2017, which will appear in the fall, will delve deeper into this research and feature – in addition to portraits of the winners and participants – a series of essays on the topic by different authors.

WAITING2BGHOSTS - AGAIN

Four screens are placed at 45° in the corners of a space the size of a cube. The text running across the screens and the height at which they are installed recall the information boards often found in the public transport system, the electric blue carpet adding to this soothing appearance. This efficiency, a product of our society of communication, is countered by white noise which emphasizes the text on the screens. The latter inventively draws on different syntactic and typographical constructions found in mobile phone texting as well as in concrete and spatial poetry. The fact that the screens are synchronized means that viewers miss information when they move and since it seems we are allowed to read between the signs, this work reminds us that every thought is a throw of the dice.

Jean-Charles de Quillacq
(1979, lives and works in Zurich)
jeancharlesdequillacq.com
17 Holes in the Wall / Not the Reproduction of Something I Experienced Myself / Knife / Fork / Getting a Younger Sister, Thinking of Myself

Jean-Charles de Quillacq draws on his own experience of resemblances to develop the theme of adaptation in sculptural objectification. The baguette becomes a cigarette butt. The surface qualities of pipes mimic chocolate icing or bread crusts. The differences of one are thus reflected in the other: the real bread in the image of the surface of the crust and the image in its sculptural presence. De Quillacq's exploration of the inherent meaning of formal expression leads him on to the question of how to place sculptures in space. Different plinth heights, horizontally displayed sculptures and varying scales involve viewers entering the space in an act of referencing – from appearance to actual presence to questions of identity.

Cédric Eisenring
(1983, lives and works in Zurich)
Industrial Dreamer I/II / Bleizeit / Lobby Boy

The four pieces on display here represent variations on the bas-relief. Three of them explore the possibilities of engraving by revisiting traditional processes. The two large triptychs are rendered using intaglio on industrial panels which are engraved on both sides. The cut sections of the motif left blank during the printing process are integrated into the composition like clouds mechanically arranged in the sky. Elsewhere the woodcut on velvet brings figures reminiscent of the Northern Renaissance to the foreground. Eisenring does away with cultural borders and fuses the layers of History to tell a story as enigmatic as it is poetic.

Anne Hildbrand
(1985, lives and works in Lausanne)
FLUCHTWEG / ESCAPE ROUTE / CHEMIN DE FUITE

The work of Anna Hildbrand investigates sculpture, installation and photography, creating subtle echoes between these diverse mediums and practices. The artist used her collection of diapositives dating back to 2009 to produce a photographic series entitled FLUCHTWEG/ESCAPE ROUTE/CHEMIN DE FUITE. Selected and juxtaposed with remarkable precision, these vertical images of nocturnal urban environments, architectural details, industrial lighting and domestic universes create both a specific and an undefined image quality that dynamically plays with visual, spatial and thematic expectations. Hildbrand's installation conjures up a quasi-cinematic perception of space and of the photographic subject, reversed, set off balance, reoriented one after the other.

Florence Jung
(1986, lives and works in Biel/Bienne)

JUNG53

A closed door. Painted white, it blends in perfectly with the architecture of the exhibition – neutral, a side note. Only the latch and keyhole cause the viewer to pause. The wall label confirms their suspicion – this is an artwork. But the door doesn't open. A physical resistance from the other side stops the viewer from entering. Being stood up by a door prompts another door to open – a mental door. Uncertainty and guesswork turn into ideas. Ideas become stories. Stories formulate questions and questions lead to doubt. Questions and doubt can be communicated. Rumours start. In her performance, Florence Jung enacts the process of aesthetic experience as rumour.

Miriam Laura Leonardi
 (1985, lives and works in Zurich)
i

The wall installation i takes up the motif of a sketch that VALIE EXPORT made in 1973 for a monument that remained at a draft stage. The drawing shows the hands of the artist nailed to the sky, each nail head bearing a letter of her “identity”. The work thus denounces the female artist chained in her acts through a form of self-mutilation. In addition to offering a possible realization of EXPORT’s project, Leonardi here puts forward a piece that has lost its initial violence, oscillating between self-portrait and landscape, between hands and the cloud. Fusing mural painting with plexiglass and copper, this installation encompasses a plurality of perspectives, the result of which is a multifaceted identity made up of different strata, projections and appropriations.

Tobias Madison
 (1985, lives and works in New York)
Red Lace, Moon Unit, Black Comet, Cometh! / CANDY (Disambiguation)

Tobias Madison’s interdisciplinary installation succeeds in the difficult task of reconciling highly complex content with aesthetic unity. Moon Unit, a doll from the estate of the rock legend Frank Zappa, sits in a wheelchair next to a five-part painting that makes up the word CANDY, a quote from ‘Psychocandy’, a vinyl cover of the band The Jesus and Mary Chain. The audience is invited to sit down and listen to a soundtrack where two monologues are spoken on the dichotomy of the word pairs stupid/smart and human/animal. Despite the abundance of references, Madison manages to address serious issues whilst maintaining a lightness of tone – thanks to a bit of humour –, conjuring up a multitude of associations in the viewer’s head at dizzying speed.

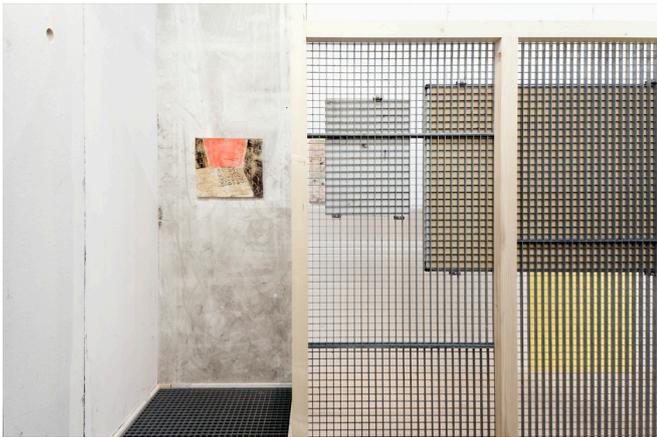

Manon Wertenbroek

(1991, lives and works in Lausanne and Paris)
manonwertenbroek.com

I Saw You Smile Yesterday / Tow Women Waiting / Labdanum / The Cool Guy

Wertenbroek develops the theme of the portrait in four photographic prints created from cut or engraved mirror foil which were then exposed to the light of a computer screen. The prints are fragmented evocations of the subject, suggested here and there by some hands, hair or a barely sketched face. As if on a treasure hunt the viewer follows the clues and reconstructs the puzzle of an evanescent presence. Moving from the pictorial to the precise art of engraving, Wertenbroek here reveals her interest in the material itself and the effects created on contact with light, seizing the opportunity to address the issue of identity and its perception and reproduction through different filters.

Micha Zweifel

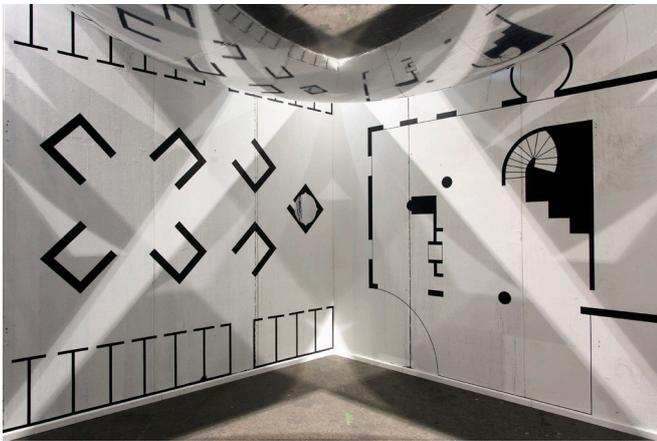

(1987, lives and works in Rotterdam)
michazweifel.ch

Kurze Lüftungspause (Short Break For Ventilation)

Micha Zweifel chooses to display his work in a slightly set back booth of the exhibition, creating an entrance zone whose plaster relief points to the concentration of spatial imaginary worlds within. Kurze Lüftungspause shows the superimposition of air-raid shelters for cultural artifacts and the workplace of anonymous employees, of wistfully placed patches of colour on the walls offering some respite and discreet references to revelry outside of these constraints. Micha Zweifel balances these spatial evocations and different reminiscences with remarkable skill, opening up new horizons for the imagination and integrating the room itself into the reflection despite limited space.

A Pavilion

A spectacular sphere rests nonchalantly on a white box, the edges of which have been left unfinished. The ball not only reflects the hall, but also replicates it from within with beguiling lightness. In the interior surprising light effects irritate and disorientate the viewer under the ball that now starts to feel oppressive, capturing an unexpected sense of weight. Exaggeratedly large schematic plans on the four walls contribute to the disorienting atmosphere, marking focused spatial interventions. Rodet & Truwant's project transforms a simple box in a pavilion by turning it into a pure architectural object, continuing their research into the relationship between abstract forms and specific spatial contexts.

Egija Inzule
(1986, lives and works in Basel)

Egija Inzule embodies the nomadic life of a curator working internationally, a life more typically associated with an artist. Last year's projects took place in Künstlerhaus Stuttgart, Kunsthalle Zürich, Istituto Svizzero di Roma, kim? Contemporary Art Centre in Riga, Palais de Tokyo and castillo/corrales in Paris. Her curatorial focus is thematic and centers around cases in which artistic production tries to negotiate the process of social commitment. Since 2015 she has been organizing a touring exhibition on the archive of Fred Lonidier, an artist and photographer from San Diego whose work from the 1970s is characterized by a strong sense of social commitment.
